FADS THAT AMUSE NEWPORT

THE HATLESS YOUNG WOMAN A VERY POPULAR ACCIDENT.

Chance Started the "Hair-Hanging-Downthe-Back" Fashlon, but It Has Spread Red Riding Hoods, Parrots and Punching Bags Other New Notions.

NEWPORT, R. I., July 4.-The introduction of fads in Newport is sometimes quite accidental. This was the case with the hair-hanging-down-the-back" fad. It has become popular, and the fame of the three young women who started it has spread far and near. It has even gone so far that when the excursion boats come to Newport, half the girls who land from them their hair dressed in child fashion.

Miss Natica Rives, daughter of Mrs. George L. Rives, and Miss Cynthia Roche, daughter of Mrs. Burke-Roche, made an engagement one evening to meet the next morning at 9 o'clock. As the fates would have it, that very morning was the time appointed for the maids of these young women to shampoo their locks.

Whatever the cause of the maids' delay in performing their duties, when the operation was only half completed it was nearly g o'clock, and both young women, each unknown to the other, were in a quandary. That engagement could not be postponed, but then there were the moist tresses of both girls to be considered.

Miss Rives in a worried state of mind telephoned to her friend and told of her predicament. To her surprise Miss Roche had a similar tale of woe to unfold. What could they do? A series of "I will, if you will" went sweeping over the wires between Swanhurst and Elm Court and the result was hat half an hour later Miss Rives and Miss Roche appeared on Thames street. to the surprise of their friends and every one else, with streaming locks, which, by that time, had been dried by the wind.

While Miss Rives was on the high seat of the carriage she looked like a pretty little girl of ten. Her nut-brown hair, which doesn't reach far below her shoulders, was tied up on top with a wide black ribbon, and the unconfined ringlets were wind-blown about her pretty face.

Miss Roche rejoices in the fact that her hair reaches far below the waist line, and on that morning the long plait of dark brown hair hanging down her back made her look like a very tall, very young school-

There is a trinity of leaders in the young set, and the other member of the trinity Miss Natalie Schenck. When she happened to meet the other two with their flying locks, she stopped short and gazed at them until they gave an explanation.

She thought it was a good joke, and straightway removed the hairpins that confined her blond tresses and climbed into the cart with her two chums, and all three, with flying hair, drove about the town. So much for the introduction of the hanging-hair fad.

The trinity that lead never adopt the fads introduced by anybody else. They prefer to be strictly original, and when the President's daughter, Miss Alice Roosevelt, set the fad for the walking sticks it was utterly ignored by the Newport girls. They never play the game of follow my leader. Their game is to lead.

Last summer when a stray kitten made its appearance on the Casino lawn, not a soul noticed it for weeks. It came and went, receiving no attention unless it happened to get under somebody's feet. But kitty, heretofore unnoticed, achieved fame, and was immediately taken up by society.

Happening to see it one morning, Miss Roche picked up the little bundle of fur, caressed it, named it and announced to her friends that she had adopted it, and expected every one of them to treat it

Poor kittle never recovered from the shock. The change from her former humble station, when she had to run at the approach of the smart set, was in too vivid contrast to her present position, when she was whistled for, coaxed, petted and fed with the choicest morrels from the grill room

As some one termed it, the "sine sombrero" fad is an old one, so old in fact that to see a girl with a hat is a novelty. The delicate pink and white complexions have all disappeared, and the bright red cheeks, healthy coat of tan, to say nothing of a fe r freckles, make a vast difference in the loss of the girls. iven up the month of June, which was dreadfully dull in Newport, the girls tried first one scheme and then another. It was too wet for tennis and golf and too cold for bathing and all sorts of stunts were tried to Long walks in the pouring rain, hatless and umbrellaless, were tried for a time and even that palled. Then all their energies were concentrated in designing rain coats, the like of which had never been seen be-

If this rain coat fad becomes as popular as the hatless and hanging-hair fad, there will be a season of countless little Red Riding Hoods, as the girls finally decided that nothing but bright red rain coats would do and the effect was startling. It rained almost continuously during the month of June and the young women found plenty of time to sport their new coats, and any day you could see, either driving or promenading, Miss Natalie Schenck, Miss Cynthia Roche, Miss Natica Rives, Miss Gladys Brooks, Miss Laura Swan, Miss Anna Best and Miss Nora Iselin, veritable studies in

The red rain coats furnished a topic of conversation for a few days, and of course t was time to search for another fad. But what should it be? That was the question People must have something new, and the trinity announced that it must be some-

Why not have punching bags? some one asked. Punching the bag is great exercise and had never been tried before by these Consequently in the pavilion at Bailey's Beach half a dozen punching bags were suspended, and the young women met there every morning to exhibit their skill to admiring spectators.

their skill to admiring spectators.

The adoption of fads is not confined to the younger set. Even the staid matrons, young and old, include their pet longings. Mrs. Belle Kemp has a marvellous parrot, a beautiful green bird with bright round eyes and a wonderful vocabulary. Not only is this parrot's vocabulary. only is this parrot's vocabulary exter Morning when the cage is bung in the plazza of The Nutshell the passerby may bear Polly singing at the top of her imitation of a soprano: "Je ne

RELIANCE'S GOOD SHOWING.

MANY SECONDS FASTER THAN THE CONSTITUTION.

In Races Where the Two Have Met the Reliance Has Beaten the Constitution by 8 Seconds a Mile-Her Strongest Point is Turning to Windward.

The Reliance in the series of races that have been sailed in these waters has shown that in light weather she is a wonder. She has won every race except one, which was finished within the time limit, and in that one race she lost her topmast soon after the start Twice the Constitution has been very close to her at the finish, but not near enough to win the race even with the allowance that the Reliance will have to give. The three yachts have been officially measured, but the committee of the New York Yacht Club will not make the figures public until later in the season and possibly public until later in the season and possibly not until just before the series of races for the America's Cup is begun. It has been learned, though, that the Reliance measures very near to 108 feet racing length, the Constitution's length is about 104 and the Columbia's 102.275. The Reliance has to allow the Constitution about 1 minute 50 seconds over a thirty-mile course and the Columbia about a thirty-mile course and the Columbia about

3 minutes
The Reliance, Constitution and Columbia
The Reliance, Constitution and Columbia have sailed nine races in these waters, and, although many of them were very unsatisfactory because of the flukiness of the wind, they showed that in smooth seas and light winds the Reliance is several seconds a mile faster than either of the others. A study of the figures of these races is interesting to all yachtsmen. One of the nine races was finished in a flat calm and the Columbia was more than two hours astern of the Reliance, so that this event is omitted in Reliance, so that this event is omitted in figuring the averages.

The Reliance finished in seven of the races, and she was ahead in each one. In the eighth she lost her topmast soon after starting. The Constitution was not ready for the first race, and lost her topmast in another. The total distance sailed by each yacht and the total time and average time a mile is shown in the following.

This shows that on the total distance sailed the Reliance was 26.6 seconds a mile faster than the Constitution, and 29.5 sec-onds faster than the Columbia.

The best point of sailing with the Reliance is turning to windward. In the races in which the three yachts started and finished they had 371/2 miles of windward work, The times made by each yacht were:

Collected From Liquor Dealers.

Augusta, Me., July 4. The Maine Liquor law provides that every county may set aside every year $500 from the fines colceted from liquor dealers and devote this sum to replenishing and building up the law libraries in the different court houses. In counties with two court houses, as in Washington and Arcostook courties, the sum may be increased to $1,000 a year. This feature was incorporated in the Maine law away back in 1862, and for forty tributing $9,000 a year toward buying ne books for the lawyers and Justices to us in deciding knotty problems.

Every court house in the State has a large room fitted up as a library, the shelves of which are congested with the best textbooks and most complete reports of decisions that money can buy, every book having been paid for by the men who sell liquor in defiance of the law. In proportion to its wealth and population, Maine contains the largest number of excellent law libraries of any State in the Union.

"And the worst of it all is," said an old liquor dealer, "the more books we pay for the more the lawyers learn how to pine us where it hurts, until now our fines are as sure as death or taxes and the cost of setting ment has increased four-fold since I began

"I am saying no more than the truth when I tell you that no dealer in Maine can afford to pay more than $2 a gallon for whiskey, which he sells over the bar for 10 cents glass. So, while the lawyers are gaining in wisdom from the books which we buy for them, we are getting in our reveny by selling them cheap whiskey, which eating the lining out of their stomach and making them old men before the
